US-IRAQI INTERCOURSE

PAGE THREE

by Mike Chrisman

Regular readers of this column know nothing fascinates me more than unusual projectiles. So imagine my delight when a recent story about basketball in The Daily Hampshire (Home of Unusual Projectiles) Gazette described oldtime basketball fans as "wont to shower players with coins or heated nails."

Now, my view of oldtime basketball has always been: they dribble the ball three times, they pass it for five minutes, they take a two-handed set shot, then the other guys try it. The final score is 16-11.

But this hot nails thing puts a whole new light on it. Maybe they passed the ball so much because every time they tried to drive down the lane, some jerk from out of town chucked a few glowing twenty-penny spikes at their feet. That'd screw up your dribbling.

Or say every time the ball changes hands, the opposing fans fling handfuls of finishing nails as you inbound the ball. Hot finishing nails. I think by the third quarter, I'd be wondering why I didn't try out for wrestling.

But where'd they come up with this? Okay, coins I can understand. Hockey fans, when they're allowed out of the wards, still throw coins onto the playing area. I mean, coins are something most people have in their pockets; they're accessible. But nails?? And how did they keep them hot? Was it like, "OK, honey, let's not be late...Lessee...I got the tickets, the seat cushions, my wallet...oops, almost forgot the brazier and carpet tacks...."

I knew I'd never sleep until I got some of these questions answered. So I called Wayne Patterson, Head Librarian at the Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield (Birthplace of Hoops), Mass. Boy, did he open my eyes! Turns out in the early days as many as half of all basketball games were played with the players protected by chicken wire. He explained that didn't mean the players wore chicken wire, which would have left disgusting marks on their skin. Instead, the court was surrounded by a humongoid cage to keep the fans and players from maiming each other in the name of sport.

Furthermore — listen to this! — the cage wasn't just to put a damper on the coin-and-nail-tossers, either. In those days, there was no such thing as out of bounds. If the ball went twelve rows up in the seats, whichever team got the ball first, got the ball. Imagine Charles Barkley and Patrick Ewing scrambling for a loose ball twelve rows up. I'd like to see that on ESPN. Then fans would go, "OK, honey, let's not be late....got the tickets, my wallet, hospital addresses..."

Personally, I think the NBA is missing the boat by not fully exploiting the sport's history. Sure, they put on special exhibitions of slam-dunks and three-point shots. But those are modern inventions. It used to be illegal to dunk. I think they could raise an enormous chunk of ad revenue with exhibition games where each fan is provided with a cupful of hot nails, and there's no out of bounds. Kind of a combination American Gladiators and Rescue 911. Maybe they could even have Michael Jackson sing at halftime. And for a special fee, fans could throw hot nails at him.

Insurance

Normally, You'd think "Yeah, so what?" But with winter still here and the student population returning, you should be thinking "Collision Insurance" because you can be sure that if you don't have it, some college freshman who's driving Grandma's '72 LTD is going to be driving too fast in your vicinity, and he's going to be driving on ice. You can also be sure that rather than hitting a telephone pole, he's going to hit your new car. What's worse is that he is going to be from someplace like Rhode Island and he'll be uninsured. "Golly," you'll be thinking, "I'm sure glad that I insured with John Copen for hassle free insurance." And if you didn't... Life will have it's ups and downs, and so will your quarterpanels.

...Sort of makes you think "Home Owner's" or "Tenant Renter's Insurance." With the fire in the wood stove and all that snow on the roof... Maybe you should ask John Copen what kinds of policies he's got.

TAKE IT OR LEAVE IT by L.M. Boyd

Monaco, along the south coast of France, is on the same latitude as Portland, Maine.

Q. You said "companionship" always ranks first in those surveys asking what people most want out of marriage. What comes in second?
A. "Reciprocated love." Then, "financial security," "reliable sex," and "intellectual stimulation."

Massachusetts has 106 colleges and universities.

In 1895 Congress passed a law to require every town of 50,000 people to set up free public baths.

The French writer Andre Gide said, "It is better to be hated for what you are than to be loved for what you are not."

About three-quarters of the nutritional value in a pumpkin is in the seeds.

Census-takers in China's Guangzhou (formerly Canton) report it's not extraordinary for 20,000 bicyclists to cross any of many intersections there in one hour.

Q. Which seabirds dive the deepest?
A. Penguins. They dive as far as 800 feet.

Lose 20 percent of your body's water, and you're a goner. Yet the medicos say you could lose 80 percent of your intestines, one lung, one kidney, every organ in the pelvic area, your spleen, and 75 percent of your liver, and still survive.

Found in a fortune cookie: "You are in your own way — please stand aside."

There are 102 counties in Illinois, and they all grow soybeans.

Legal scholars estimate there are 35 million laws to enforce the Ten Commandments. And many more that don't. For instance, in England, it's illegal to wrestle in public with an untrained bull.

Q. Are there any parasites among mammals?
A. Only one. The vampire bat.

Among the better New Year's toasts: "May the worst of this year be even better than the best of last year!"

Forty-five pounds doesn't seem like too much to lift. But when you lift it, you leverage 900 pounds of pressure on the third disc of your back.

The word "crummy" to mean something undesirable has been around for about 400 years.

The ancient Babylonians decreed the death penalty for anyone convicted of selling bad beer.

The writer Dorothy L. Sayers said this: "Time and trouble will tame an advanced young woman, but an advanced old woman is uncontrollable by any earthly force."

Q. Do all doctors keep handguns in their offices?
A. Certainly not all. But more than half do.

Nobody has even the slightest idea of how many animal species live on earth.

Marketers figure that only one out of every 10 American boys doesn't own a Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle figure.

It's true that water seeks its own level. But it can't always find it. In the oceans, that level can vary by 600 feet. If there's a mountain range out there, like the Hawaiian chain, its gravitational pull raises the water level around it.

New England is bigger than old England.

Your thumb is about the size of a crocodile's brain.

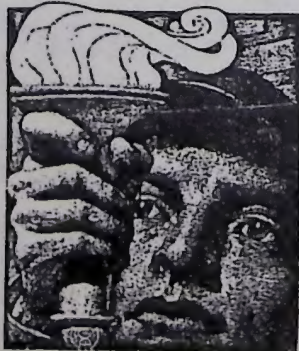

Publishers say they have to sell at least 4,000 rightly-priced books to break even.

This is reported to be the first time in history when the average American has more living parents than living children.

Q. Name the only woman to be queen of two European countries.
A. Eleanor of Aquitaine. At age 15, she married Louis VII to be Queen of France. After her marriage was annulled 15 years later, she married King Henry II to become Queen of England.

EARTHWEEK: A DIARY OF THE PLANET

Killer Storms

Fierce storms caused several deaths and severe flooding in Germany, Poland and Scotland. Three men died in Scotland where winds of up to 85 miles per hour uprooted trees and tore roofs from buildings.

One person was killed in Germany when gales struck the North Sea coast and flooded low-lying areas. Evacuations occurred in Hamburg, Bremen, and the states of Lower Saxony and Schleswig-Holstein.

Three people were killed in Poland and rail traffic stalled when strong winds wrecked power lines in the southern city of Bielsko-Biala. A freak snowstorm also blanketed Lublin. Two storm victims died when falling trees crushed their cars.

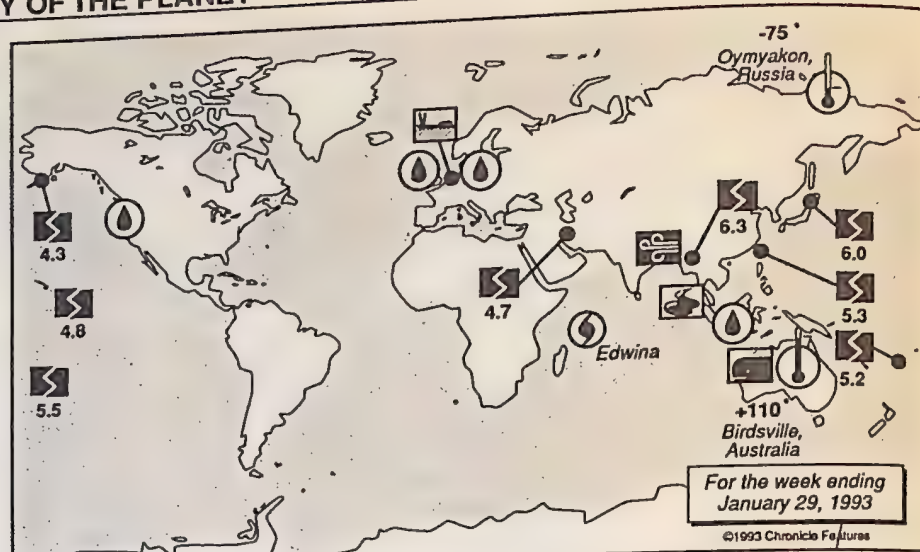

Eighteen people died in Indonesia during three days of heavy floods and storms. The worst damage occurred on Flores and Sumba islands. The newspaper Kompas reported that heavy rains in east Java caused the Solo River to overflow. Other deaths occurred in south Sulawesi province.

Up to 6 inches of rain fell in parts of the state of Washington, forcing police to evacuate people by boat. Flood warnings were issued for six western Washington rivers.

Earthquakes

A magnitude 6.3 earthquake destroyed 172 homes, damaged 1,600 more and injured 31 people in China's Pu'er province. A spokesman at the State Seismological Bureau in Beijing said helicopters brought 15 seriously injured people to hospitals. Cracks were also found in a local reservoir in Yunnan province near the Laotian border.

The Japan Central Meteorological Agency recorded a magnitude 6 earthquake centered off the Pacific coast of Hokkaido. No injuries or damage were reported. Other earth movements were recorded in Alaska, Hawaii, Vanuatu, American Samoa, Taiwan, and Iran.

Cigarette Spill

Crews using tulip bulb combines are clearing beaches near Callantsog, Netherlands, after 18 containers carrying 10 million cigarettes each were swept from the German freighter Hamburg Star. Thousands of people flocked to the northern Dutch beach to gather the cigarettes, still dry in their cellophane-wrapped packages. Police spokesman Wil Wieggers said a 13-mile stretch of beach was covered by cigarettes "as far as the eye can see."

Deadly Winds

Almost 200 people were killed by icy winds which swept across northern Bangladesh. Fifty-two people died in one day, mostly elderly laborers and homeless children. Bangladesh is one of the world's poorest nations, and the cold has affected millions of its underfed populace.

Tropical Storms

Cyclone Edwina churned harmlessly in the Indian Ocean with wind speeds up to 95 miles per hour.

Tanker Spill

Salvage crews have put out the fire aboard the Maersk Navigator that burned for six days in the Andaman Sea. The ship, carrying 78 million gallons of oil, collided with the Sanko Honor. An oil leak from the collision left a 20-mile-long oil slick that threatened the area near India's Great Nicobar island, home to endangered species including rare turtles and the dugong. India's anti-pollution efforts kept the slick from creating any major environmental damage. Malaysian Prime Minister Mahathir, speaking on Radio Malaysia, said a coordinating body must be established by countries in the area to control such oil spills. The prime minister suggested a tax or levy on ships passing through the area to pay for spill cleanup in the future.

Leviathan Battle

Scientists found a 45-foot sperm whale that died after a ferocious undersea battle with a giant squid. Peter Murray of the Northern Territory's Museum of Arts and Sciences said "There are squid scar marks on his nose. The squids are obviously not easy to subdue, so whales get entangled in these big long arms...and they really do tear into the whale's flesh." The 40-ton whale died on a beach not far from where sperm whales feed on giant squid in the waters off northern Australia.

Eruptions

Mayon Volcano erupted without warning in the central Philippines, spewing a plume of gritty ash nearly three miles into the sky. Authorities said that scores of villagers were missing and feared dead from the disaster, while thousands of others fled the mountain in cars, trucks, and ox-carts. Magma still building within the volcano led volcanologists to fear that an even more powerful explosion may be imminent.

Officials in western Mexico declared a state of alert because of the eruption of what may be a new volcano on Socorro Island, about 300 miles south of the tip of Baja California. Some reports said the activity was coming from the 3,960-foot Everman Volcano, one of the two known to exist on the island, but the Excelsior news agency said it could be the birth of a new volcano.

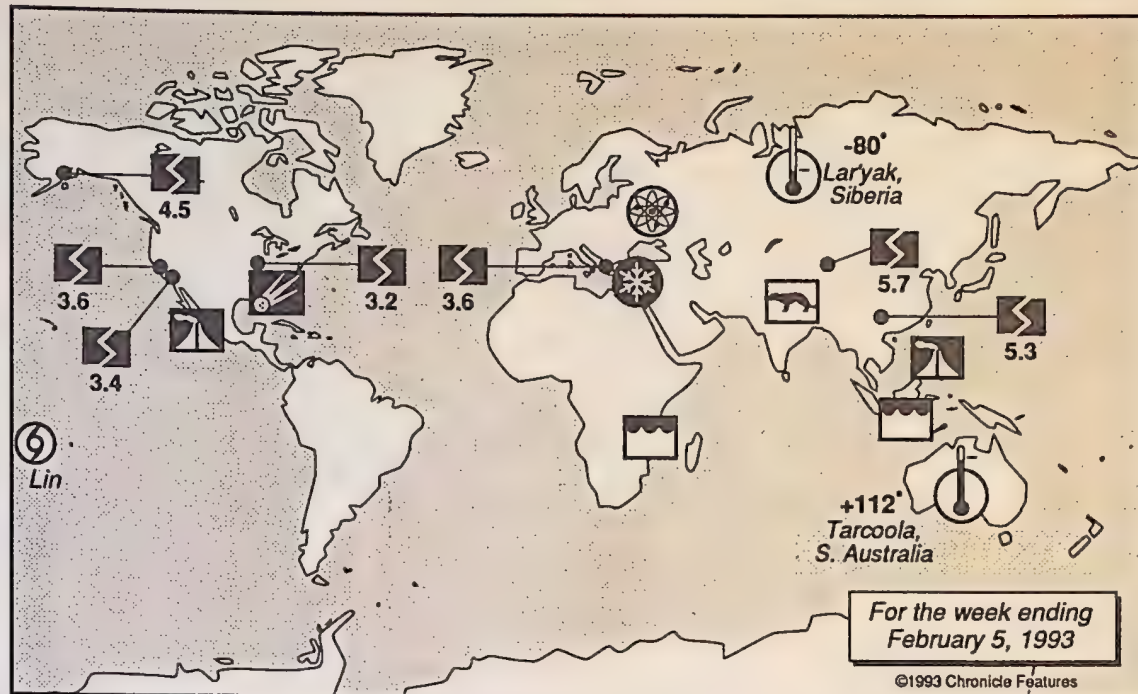

Floods

Floods swelling rivers and lakes in parts of eastern Africa derailed a Kenyan train packed with 600 passengers and killed at least 33 people in neighboring Tanzania as the region emerges from the worst drought in living memory. A flash flood sent the night train from Mombasa to Nairobi tumbling into a river called God Save Us on Jan. 30. At least 140 passengers were swept to their death or died on impact with the raging river.

Bridges and roads have been swept away across a wide area, and the inundations may cause heavy crop losses. Kenya Wildlife director Richard Leakey said that roads in the Ambrosli park, a popular tourist destination, were impassable and a huge lake had formed there following weeks of heavy rainfall.

In Indonesia, about 600,000 people across Java were forced to higher ground following incessant heavy rains. Floods and landslides have taken 34 lives and paralyzed traffic links over the island.

Wintery Woes

A winter storm spawned blizzards and heavy snowfall from Turkey to the deserts of the Middle East. Schools and shops were shut in Jordan, which received as much as 30 inches of snowfall in the northern mountains. Palestinian youths in the Israeli-occupied West Bank threw snowballs at passing cars instead of the usual stones. As the storm moved into the more temperate climes of the northern Persian Gulf, it produced heavy downpours that swamped roads and caused several houses to collapse in Kuwait.

Fireball

Residents from Alabama to North Carolina were startled by a huge meteor that produced explosions and sonic booms as it streaked across the night sky. The sounds were so thunderous that some people thought that an earthquake had struck. Georgia

State University astronomer John Wilson said that the chunk of space rock appeared to break into three flaming pieces before hitting the ground.

Cat Attacks

Residents in a remote part of Nepal demanded official action after a leopard killed seven children and wounded a dozen adults during the past month. A report in the Rising Nepal daily newspaper said the killer leopard pounced on its victims at dusk, targeting children at play outside their homes.

Earthquakes

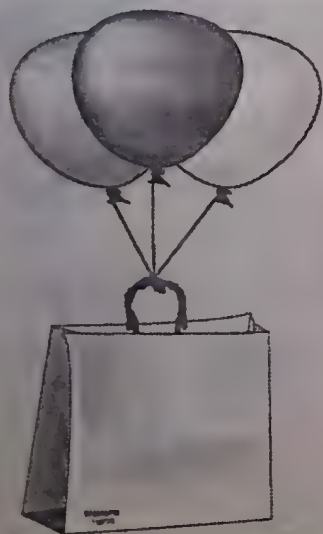

A moderate temblor measuring 5.4 on the Richter scale shook China's far western Xinjiang region, damaging houses and barns. Earth movements were also felt in China's Yunnan province, central Greece, Illinois, Alaska's Cook Inlet, and at southern and eastern points in California.

Nuclear Venom

A large part of the former Soviet Union is so contaminated with radioactivity that it is turning up in snake venom, according to a report in the British journal Nature. The contamination stems from planned releases of radioactive waste from nuclear fuel plants and accidents at atomic power plants, as well as surface and underground nuclear explosions from the Arctic to The Steppes of Central Asia. Some of the venom is being exported to the West for use in medicines and could cause radioactive poisoning in patients if the contamination is undetected during shipping and processing. A 4.5-pound consignment of snake venom was recently impounded by Russian customs officials because of its high radioactivity.

JOE BOB BRIGGS

The marketing geniuses at the big food companies decided last year that it's now okay if food tastes good.

I'm not kidding. This was a controversial issue within the halls of Kraft, General Foods, Sara Lee, Wonder Bread, Coke, Pepsi, and Mountain Dew. They actually had meetings where they sat around and said, "Well, what do you think the consumer wants in the nineties? Here's an idea. Call me crazy, but maybe the stuff should taste good."

And there were people who said, "Naaaah. Give it up."

And it turns out that, for the last ten years, a lot of companies have been purposely making food that doesn't taste quite so good, just so people will think it's good for them. You get the idea here? If you put out a Diet Coke that tastes exactly like Classic Coke, then whoever's drinking it starts to feel guilty. But make it taste just a little bitter, and — voila! — the person feels great! They've stayed on their diet, and they've suffered. They've refused that Classic Coke taste. They're good people.

The same goes for the packaging of foods. Back in the fifties, there was only one kind of message you put on a food package: "Delicious!" Every word on the package was some form of "Delicious!" Every food was scrumptious, tasty, yum-yum, or heavenly.

But that all changed in the eighties. The message became "No Fat," "Low Fat," "Eighty Percent Less Cholesterol." (Those were always funny to me, because I'd think, "Eighty percent less than what? Eighty percent less than a tub of lard?") Even companies like Sara Lee — which, let's face it, are basically in the "stuff your face" business — started advertising "low sugar," "less cholesterol." But one thing the marketing guys never, ever put on their labels was "tastes great" — unless, of course, they added "less filling."

A hundred years from now, somebody will write a book about

America's eating habits in the 20th century, and it will say, "In the 1980s, food fads reached their apex when people started drinking diet beer."

If there's anything that oughta be bought on the basis of taste alone, it's a goldurn beer.

So anyhow, what these guys are saying is that a lot of people developed this brain disease where they said to themselves, "Tastes bad? Must be good for me. Tastes good? Must be awful for my health." And so anything that was just a big ole lump of syrupy sugar cake in a box, that looks like it would taste great, became about as welcome in a grocery store as a chain-smoking gang of orange-haired shoplifters in motorcycle jackets.

But this year, you know what people are eating?

According to The New York Times, Haagen-Dazs has increased its market share from 5.9 percent to 7.6 percent. And there are all these complicated explanations about why people feel it's okay to pig out on high-fat ice cream.

I've got another explanation: It's only food. It's something you can put in your body like gas in a car. And then you can forget it. Wouldn't this be a lot simpler for everybody involved?

Sometimes you'd just turn your head, and THERE IT WAS.

It was the sign of the pangolin, and there was nothing you could do.

The best you could hope for was a brief encounter. It was almost easier to just lie down and wait for it to be over, without too much discomfort.

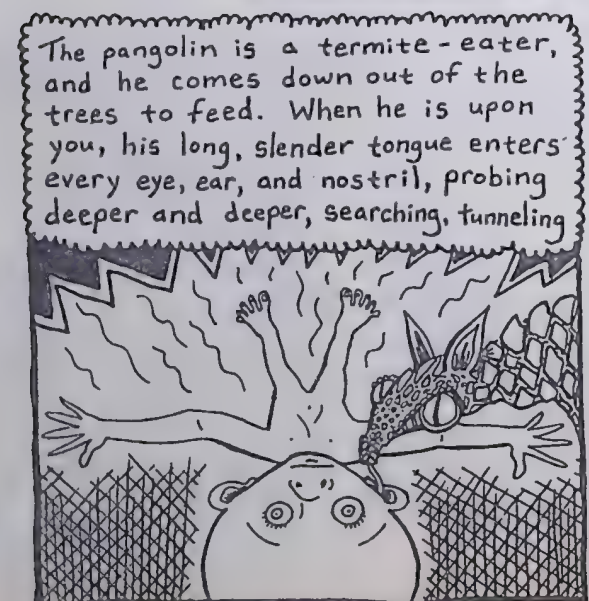

What is pangolin?

Pangolin is animal.

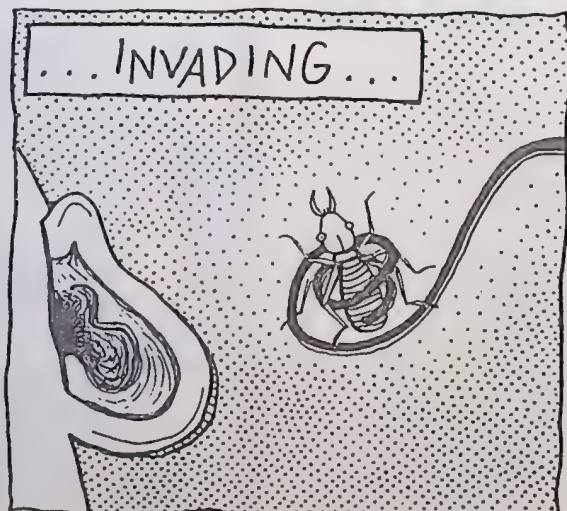

Is animal what looks like anteater, what has scaly plates like tortoise.

Pangolin has no teeth. Pangolin curls up into ball, for protection and travel.

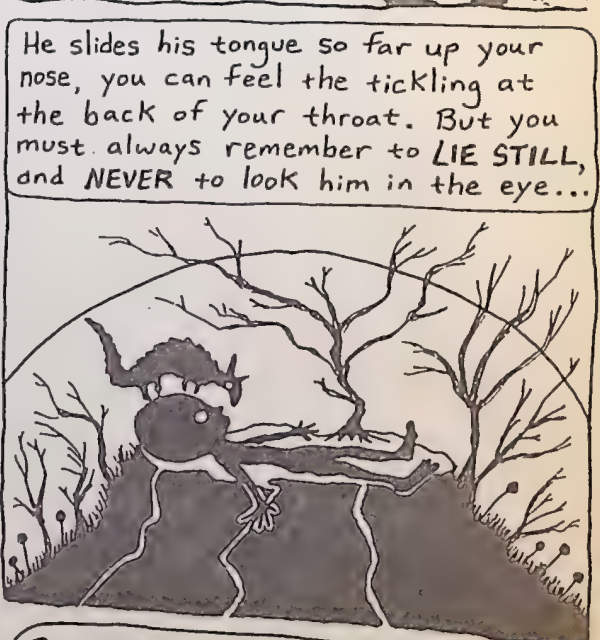

The pangolin is a termite-eater, and he comes down out of the trees to feed. When he is upon you, his long, slender tongue enters every eye, ear, and nostril, probing deeper and deeper, searching, tunneling

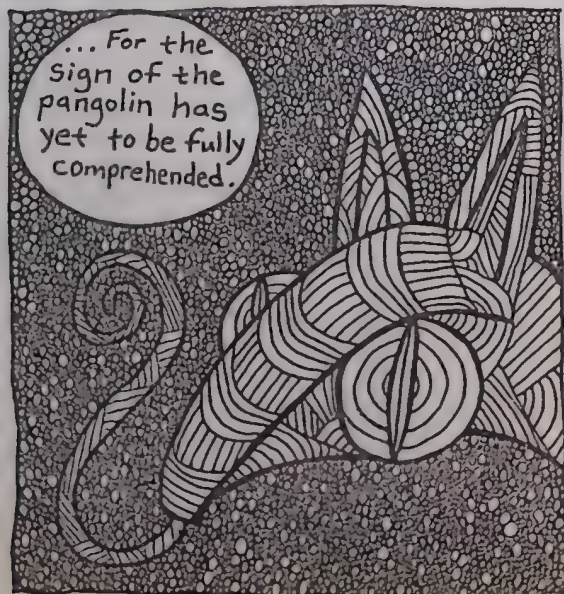

... INVADING ...

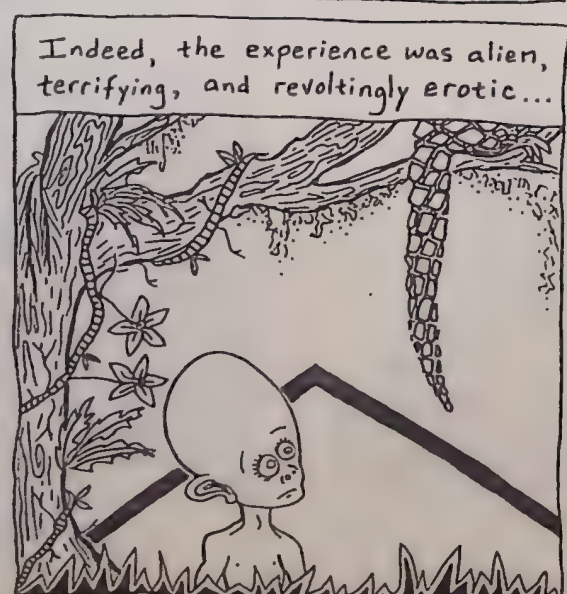

Removing any termites it may find.

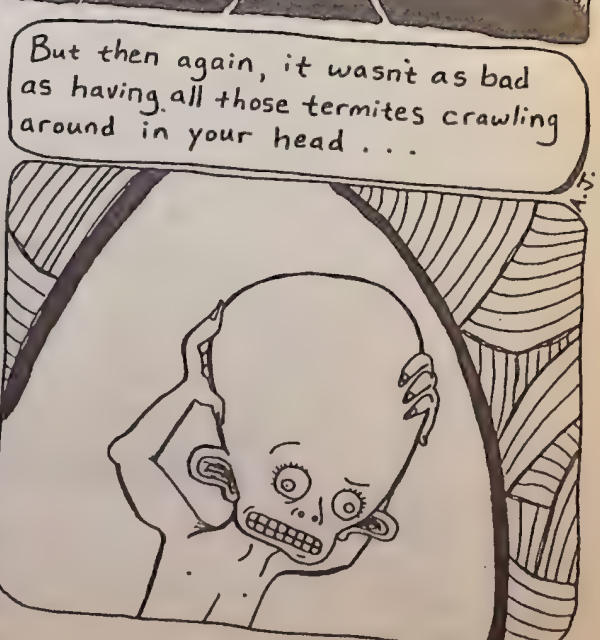

He slides his tongue so far up your nose, you can feel the tickling at the back of your throat. But you must always remember to LIE STILL, and NEVER to look him in the eye...

... For the sign of the pangolin has yet to be fully comprehended.

Indeed, the experience was alien, terrifying, and revoltingly erotic...

But then again, it wasn't as bad as having all those termites crawling around in your head...

humor me

by Izzy Gesell

I know you've tried to get into the fitness habit. First, you enrolled in dance aerobics, step aerobics, aquarobics and karatobics. Then you were jazzercised, boxercised and yogacised. You always start out psyched but soon realize there's just no fun in it. If only there was a fitness method that was amusing; one guaranteed to bring a smile to your face, no matter how hard you worked. Well, now there is. It's called Lafferobics, and these laughter gyms will soon be opening throughout the country.

The idea for pumping up through laughter was sparked by research conducted by Dr. William Fry of the University of California, Santa Barbara. His study on the correlation between laughter and energy output in the body concluded that laughing 200 times has the same physical exercise benefit as ten minutes on the rowing machine, because laughter engages muscles and body parts we don't often think about: lungs, heart, diaphragm, and rib cage to name a few. During a guffaw, everything internal is moving up and down. That's why laughing for a long time hurts the stomach, which becomes as sore as legs do when you run for a long while. Indeed, one guru of this fitness movement, Norman Cousins, described laughter as an "inner workout."

As with other physical workouts, it is imperative to warm up first. Lafferobic injuries are not funny. Explaining to your co-workers why you have an Ace bandage on your face is even less funny. Before beginning your laugh workout, start with a slow stretch of the facial, or zygomaticus, muscles. A ten minute session should do. Carefully expand from a smile to a smirk to a snicker to a chortle to a chuckle. Save the belly laughs, knee slappers and howls for when you are warmed up.

Proper footwear is essential for a productive session. Choose a specialty shoe for an exact type of laugh. These shoes are specifically designed to cushion and support various parts of the foot. It makes no sense to wear a shoe constructed for punning, which allows you to stand your ground amidst heaps of groans, if most of your exercise comes from sarcasm. For that talent you need to be light on your feet. For all-around Lafferobic footwear, I recommend the new cross-trainers. With these "Air Hennys" you can safely engage in jokes, cartoons, and quips as well as physical shtick and satire.

Some people only want to pump up one aspect of their sense of humor so they begin to concentrate on that area, and only that area, of laughter. The result is a highly defined world view that is criticized by "average" laughers as "freakish" or "unhealthy." Proponents of muscle humor claim that since it is their life and outlook, they will do what they want. Everyone agrees, though, that tickling as an artificial way to increase laughter and thereby increase humor muscles has no place in the sport. Tickling has recently been banned by the NFL (National Federation of Lafferobics).

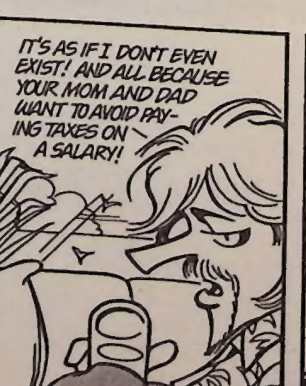

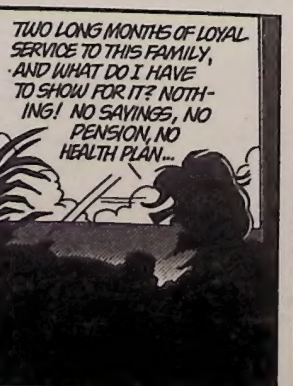

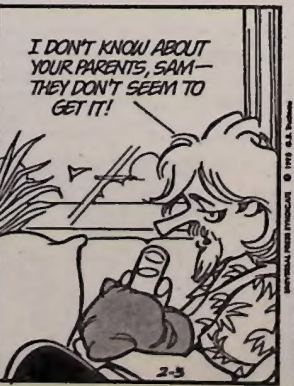

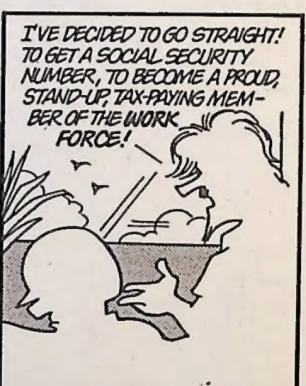

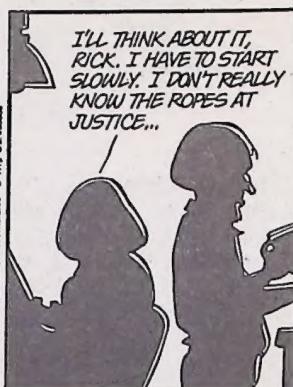

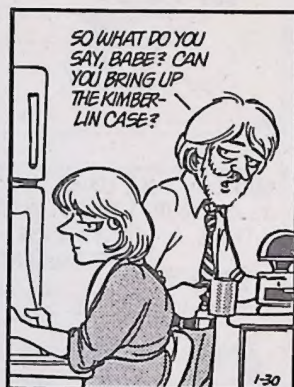

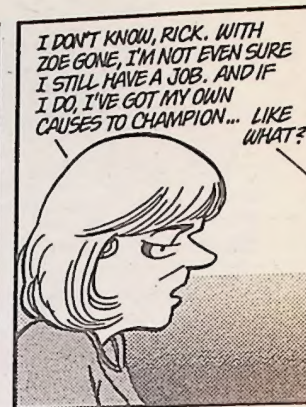

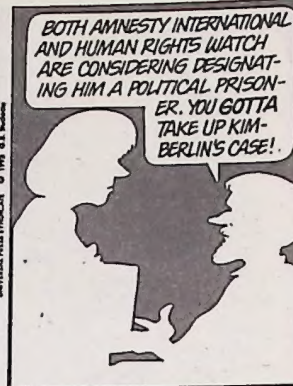

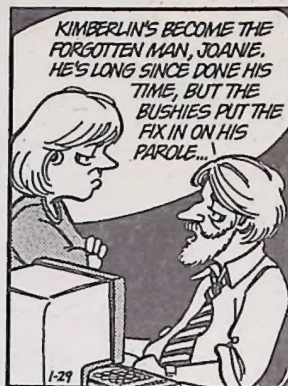

Lafferobics is trying, like much of society, to deal with gender discrimination. For too long, women have not been given the same latitude as men in choosing their outlet for laughter. For example, women who became adept at put-down humor were criticized for being "unfeminine." The critics, male and female, claimed put-down humor doesn't look very womanly. Fortunately, this attitude is changing; the trend now is for women to use put-down humor in a way that allows them to maintain femininity while developing put-down muscles.

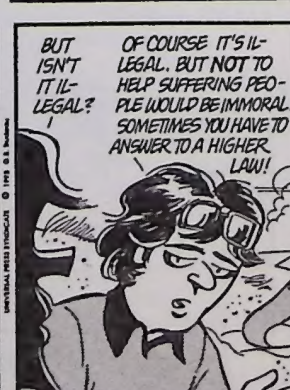

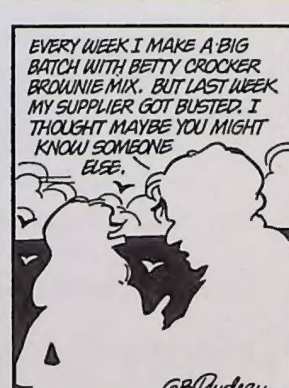

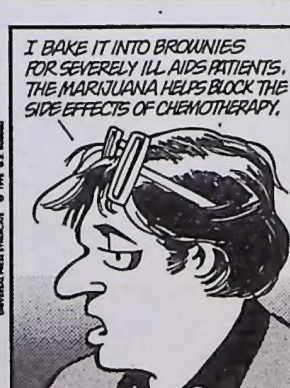

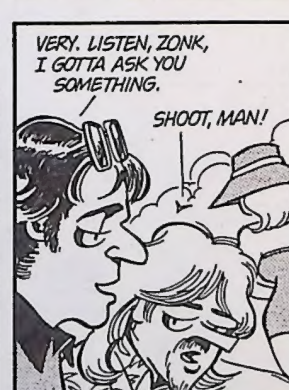

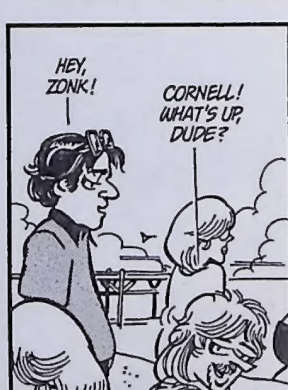

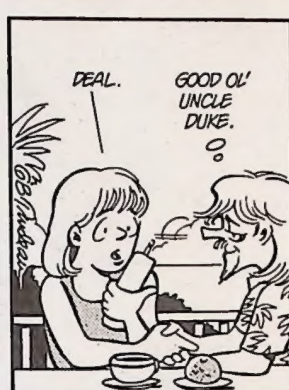

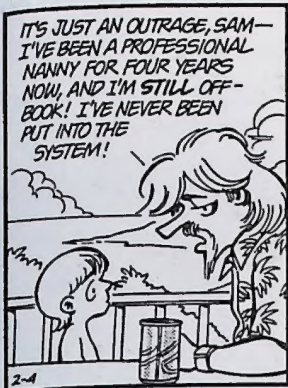

The nice thing about Lafferobics is its accessibility to all. We have classes for the humor-impaired, defined as those folks who can't or won't find anything to smile at. Treatment for the HI comes, fittingly enough, from Germany. Researchers there tried to find a way for Teutonic sourpusses, the sourest pussers in the universe, to smile. Although nothing is funny to them, the Germans and their bodies are used to doing whatever they're told. The scientists had their churlish subjects hold a pencil in their teeth. With the corners of their mouths lifted, their bodies assumed something pleasant was happening and were tricked into a smile.

I hope this information helps ease your fears about Lafferobics. Just don't think about it. After all, Moe knows laughter.
